The Challenge

Outdated interiors and mechanical systems with small rooms and some low ceiling heights. The kitchen was in the original part of the home, and the ceiling was only seven feet, four inches, so that always presents a bit of a challenge when it comes to the upper cabinet proportion and limits the options on the range hood design.

The Goal

To reconfigure and renovate an old kitchen to make it more functional from a cooking perspective and more open to the adjacent family room. They also wanted to add storage with a butler’s pantry and improve flow between the side entry and the main kitchen/family room space.

The Backstory

It was impossible for our clients to resist purchasing the property on this private road with three acres of land in Darien after spending so many years in NYC. The exterior facade had not been updated since it was built in 1941, and while some interior updates were relatively recent, the quality and styling did not meet their standards. The project included an addition and complete renovation of the kitchen and much of the first floor as well as the existing pool house.
